left a pretty strong impression, though, left a pretty strong impression, though, that he didn't see the sense of leaving his job for a day or two just to swap adjectives with the President.

Not Keenly Excited.

He said: "Some people might get all excited over an invitation of that kind, but I have shaken hands with the President before. made my debut, so to speak, and it wouldn't be a new experience by any means. I don't quite see that my little spiel up there the other night before the crowd demands a personal interview, with ompliments on the subject from President Roosevelt. It didn't amount to much, anyway. I wasn't looking for notoriety, because I am not stuck on being the headliner in the newspapers. I am no good breakfast food for a lot of people. Besides, there are plenty of folks that think just as I do about those fellows wh have got calloused tongues instead of calloused hands, and if President Roose velt should ask them all to call on him he would have to enlarge his shack.
